VALUING OTHERS ADDS VALUE

The Covid-19 pandemic is changing the way teams will work together in the future. In consequence, both managers and employees have to adapt.

A study published by McKinsey on 30 April 2020 found that 75% of decision-makers in European companies who were making extensive use of digital media at work for the first time will continue to rely on these channels when they return to "normal everyday life". In addition, 95% of the surveyed companies had migrated their sales model to the virtual world, and 50% believe that selling in this way is more effective than the traditional approach.

More than ever before, you too are now being required to collaborate and perform your work or deliver services using digital media.

Nevertheless, many things are taking an unexpected turn in these strange times. Do you or your team members feel burned out, overwhelmed or perhaps insufficiently challenged?

How do you – not only in the current situation – build good RELATIONSHIPS with other people while respecting cultural differences?
